GYPSY MOTH IN STATE

Plan to Fight Insects Found on the Schwab Estate

Harrisburg, Aug. 7. — The gypsy moth, one of the most destructive pests known in the Atlantic states, has been discovered upon spruce trees recently shipped to the Charles M. Schwab estate near Loretto from the Duke estate at Somerville, N. J.

For some time the moth has been prevalent in parts of New Jersey and the state Department of Agriculture has been conducting a campaign to keep it out of Pennsylvania, Reports of an insect damaging trees at Loretto reached the Capitol a few days ago and Director J. G. Sanders detailed one of the department experts to make an investigation. Word was received by Doctor Sanders that the moth had been identified.
